The Introduction to Blueprint Reading course is geared for those with limited or no blueprint reading experience. Both field and office personnel are encouraged to participate. Upon completion of the six-week course, participants will be able to:

- interpret line conventions, abbreviations and symbols
- understand the different scales used on drawings and recognize the difference between architect's scale and engineer's scale drawings
- read and interpret the notes and schedules located on drawings
- review and understand basic construction drawings including plan views, elevations, sections and details
- perform coordination exercises using several drawings, for example, coordination between architectural and structural drawings
- perform simple quantity take-off exercises

Each participant is responsible to bring a yellow highlighter and pencil or pen to make notes on the blueprints. Notebooks to record personal observations are optional. Minimum of 10 participants required to run the course.

Presenter, Jim Wacker, With over 28 years of experience in the construction industry experiences have been focused on and driven by quality, cost, schedule, safety, risk management and attention to detail. Working closely with owners, design professionals, as well as contractors with all parties' interests during bidding, pre-construction, construction, closeout, and commissioning while maintaining a high level of proficiency, and professionalism.
